

11 Valentine's Weekend Getaways for Every Kind of Couple

by HADLEY MENDELSON

You don't need to be a Hallmark holiday enthusiast to want to celebrate Valentine's Day by booking a romantic weekend getaway. In fact, even if dramatic gestures and cliches make you blush (or cringe), there's something about traveling that brings out everyone's inner romantic. Who wouldn't want to unwind against a beautiful backdrop or explore a new locale with someone they adore? So to spread the love and wanderlust inspiration, we found all the most majestic, exciting, and beautiful destinations around the country for any type of relationship. If you're looking for a warm-weather escape in a secluded region, an urban staycation, or a winter retreat, the 11 Valentine's weekend getaways below will woo you.

For people... who want to bask in the sun and shop in a tropical locale without leaving the excitement of a city.

The Romantic Draw: Miami is rich in art and architecture, but it's also a beautiful place to find a spot on the beach with a good book. For anyone who loves the great outdoors and trying new things, book a day trip to the Everglades. While admiring the alligators (from a safe distance), you can sit back and enjoy the slower, romantic pace as you drift through the magical backwaters. And for an unforgettable meal in a gorgeous setting, you can't miss Mandolin Aegean Bistro.

Where to Stay: The Faena Hotel looks as if it was designed to ignite some passion. It'll give you the full experience of the city in all its opulence and glory. Forbes describes it not only as "the coolest new hotel in Miami," but also as a "sensory pleasure palace." There's even an incredible on-site Damien Hirst masterpiece, so we agree that it's one of the coolest spots around—and not just in the Miami area. It's right on Collins Avenue in South Beach, though it offers more privacy since it's a little further north of the other popular hotels.
